Roseniya G. Tamano

Dr. Roseniya G. Tamano-Datu Olama is a Full Professor VI at Mindanao State University (MSU) in Marawi City. She teaches in the College of Education, where she works in English language education and teacher preparation. Her research covers reading, writing, language use, and Meranao folktales.

Contents

1 Education
2 Teaching Future Teachers
3 Research on Reading and Writing
4 Studying Meranao Folktales
5 Extension and Community Work
6 Legacy
7 References

Dr. Roseniya G. Tamano-Datu Olama

Position

Full Professor VI, Mindanao State University (Marawi City)

Department

Department of Secondary Teaching, College of Education

Education

BSEd English, University of Perpetual Help System DALTA (2008); MA Teaching English Language, De La Salle University (2014); PhD Language Studies, MSU Main Campus (2023)

Fields

English education, teacher preparation, reading and writing, Meranao literature

Notability

A senior MSU professor whose career spans classroom teaching, published research, and community-facing extension work in education

Known For

Preparing future English teachers, studying how learners read and write, and co-authoring a psychoanalytic study of Meranao folktales

Pull Quote

"Education has more than one classroom."

Education

Roseniya earned her Bachelor of Secondary Education, major in English, from the University of Perpetual Help System DALTA in Las Piñas City in 2008. She completed a Master of Arts in Teaching English Language at De La Salle University in Manila in 2014, then earned her PhD in Language Studies at MSU Main Campus in 2023.

Her path moved in clear steps: first the foundation for teaching English, then deeper knowledge of language instruction, then the broader questions about language, communication, and learning that doctoral work opens up. Those questions matter in Mindanao, where students meet different languages at home, in school, and in their communities.

Teaching Future Teachers

At MSU, Roseniya belongs to the Department of Secondary Teaching under the College of Education. Her subjects include English language education, grammar, literature, research writing, professional education, and teaching internship.

For a future teacher, these subjects lean on each other. Knowing English is one skill. Teaching it to students with different abilities, interests, and backgrounds is another. Her classes help aspiring educators learn to explain hard concepts, notice where students are stuck, and choose activities that actually help. Research writing adds one more habit: looking at evidence instead of personal impressions when trying to understand a classroom problem.

Research on Reading and Writing

In 2014, she published a study on second-language learners' self-concept as readers and their attitudes toward uninterrupted sustained silent reading. The question behind it is a familiar one: how do students see themselves as readers, and does that picture change how willing they are to pick up a book?

In 2019, she co-authored Writing Error Remediation through Guided Writing Strategy: A Mixed Method Probe, which looked at guided writing as a way to address errors in students' written work. Students need more than a page of red marks. They need to understand why an error happens and how to fix it, and this line of research gives teachers a way to test what works.

Her other collaborative studies cover citation practices in undergraduate theses, language use among English learners, the intelligibility of preservice English teachers, and the experiences of Meranao students during online learning in the COVID-19 pandemic. The topics differ, but each one deals with the challenges of learning and communication.

Studying Meranao Folktales

One part of her work takes her from the English classroom to Meranao literature. In 2022, she and Sittie Aina T. Pandapatan co-authored A Psychoanalytic Study of the Meranao Folktales, published in the Praxis International Journal of Social Science and Literature.

The study reads Meranao folktales through a psychoanalytic approach, looking at how characters and events in the stories can be interpreted. Folktales carry memorable characters, hard choices, family ties, and conflicts, and they also reflect the values and expectations of the community that tells them.

For a researcher trained in language education, this work ties language, literature, and cultural identity together. It also treats Meranao storytelling as a subject for serious study, one that students and scholars can return to, while respecting the setting in which the stories are told and remembered.

Extension and Community Work

Roseniya's work reaches beyond the university gates. In 2024, she served as proponent of educational initiatives under KAPAMANGDAO. One was a review and peer-mentoring learning camp for Grade 12 students preparing for the Senior High School Assessment and Scholastic Examination (SASE). The other was in-service training on teaching pedagogies and assessment for junior and senior high school teachers at Marawi City National High School.

Both answer practical needs. Incoming university students get extra preparation and a first look at what higher education expects. Practicing teachers get a chance to revisit their classroom methods and think again about how learning should be measured.

Legacy

Roseniya's career brings together areas that are often kept apart: English teaching, educational research, teacher preparation, and Meranao literary studies. Teaching stays at the center, while research and extension work carry her contribution past a single class or semester.

As Full Professor VI at MSU, she continues to work where language, learning, and culture meet. Her story is a reminder that education has more than one classroom: it happens when a future teacher learns to teach, when a student finds the confidence to read and write, when researchers study the stories of their own community, and when a university shares what it knows with the people it serves.

References

- Mindanao State University. 2024 Extension Projects Report (KAPAMANGDAO educational initiatives).
- Pandapatan, S. A. T., & Tamano-Datu Olama, R. G. (2022). A Psychoanalytic Study of the Meranao Folktales. Praxis International Journal of Social Science and Literature.
- Tamano-Datu Olama, R. G., et al. (2019). Writing Error Remediation through Guided Writing Strategy: A Mixed Method Probe.
- Tamano-Datu Olama, R. G. (2014). Study on second-language learners' self-concept as readers and attitudes toward uninterrupted sustained silent reading.
- Faculty profile of Dr. Roseniya G. Tamano-Datu Olama, Mindanao State University (supplied document).

Editorial Notice: BangsamoroPedia is a curated knowledge archive. Its pages are maintained by the editorial administrator to help ensure historical accuracy. If you would like to suggest corrections, share sources, or contribute information, please message the administrator through the official Facebook page: Notable Muslim Filipinos.

Retrieved from "http://bangsamoropedia.local/index.php?title=Roseniya_G._Tamano&oldid=3216"