Ansary "Abu Anas" Abdulmalik Angnie

Sheikh Ansary "Abu Anas" Abdulmalik Angnie is a pretty big deal in the world of Islamic scholarship in the Philippines. He's not just a religious leader; he's also an educator who has spent years trying to bridge the gap between traditional religious teaching and modern education. People often call him "Abu Anas," and he's widely respected as a primary authority on Hadith—the traditions and sayings of the Prophet Muhammad—within the region.

Sheikh Ansary Abdulmalik Angnie

Also known as	Abu Anas
Alma mater	Islamic University of Madinah
Known for	Hadith scholarship, Madrasah reform
Current Role	Chairman, Provincial Ulama Council (Lanao del Sur)
Organizations	League of Pilot Madaris, ISISF, JJF

A Pioneer in Education

Sheikh Ansary actually made history by becoming the very first Filipino to graduate from the College of Hadith (Kolliyatul Hadith) at the prestigious Islamic University of Madinah in Saudi Arabia. After he finished his studies there, he didn't just stay abroad; he came back home to serve as an official missionary, or Da'ee, for the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. His main mission was to share Islamic knowledge and give some much-needed guidance to the Muslim community back in the Philippines.

Leadership and Institutional Impact

Over the years, Sheikh Ansary has worn a lot of different hats. He served as the President of the Integrated Sharif Kabunsuan Islamic Foundation (ISISF) and was the Director, or Mudhir, at Jamiatu Janoub al-Filibiniyyah (JJF), which many people know as Ma'hadul Kuwait. One of his most influential roles was serving as the President of the League of Pilot Madaris in the Philippines. In that position, he worked hard to make sure Madrasah education across the country was meeting higher standards.

Reforming the Madrasah System

One of the coolest things Sheikh Ansary has done is push for the Refined Standard Madrasah Curriculum (RSMC). The idea behind this was to make sure that private Madaris (Islamic schools) were actually recognized as part of the national education system. Because of this work, students can now transfer between public schools and private Madaris without losing their academic credits. The curriculum he advocates for is a mix of both worlds—students study the Qur'an and Islamic history alongside regular subjects like Math, English, and Filipino, so they're ready for both their spiritual lives and their future careers.

Community Service and Local Leadership

Right now, Sheikh Ansary is the Chairman of the Provincial Ulama Council of Lanao del Sur. This makes him a key link between the religious community and the local government. He's the one who leads the council in making big calls, like spotting the moon to start Ramadan or declaring the date for Eid'l Fitr. During the COVID-19 pandemic, he even used his platform to help with public health, giving lectures to explain why vaccinations were important for the community's safety.

Religious Guidance and Hajj

Every year during the Hajj pilgrimage to Mecca, Sheikh Ansary serves as a Sheikh for Filipino pilgrims. He helps them through the spiritual and logistical parts of the journey, making sure everything goes smoothly. As a Maranao scholar, he's also famous for his "Wasyat" or lectures. He has this unique talent for taking really deep, complex theological ideas and explaining them in the Maranao language so that everyone can understand and relate to them. His journey from being a pioneering student in Madinah to a foundational leader at home has left a lasting mark on the Bangsamoro region and the Philippines as a whole.
