AbdulKhaliq Sharif Saripada

AbdulKhaliq Sharif Saripada (born 1955) is a Filipino Muslim scholar, translator, and author of Maranao heritage from Marawi City. Over his career spanning multiple decades, he authored and translated more than seventeen Islamic booklets in Tagalog and English, becoming one of the most prolific disseminators of Islamic knowledge to Filipino Muslim communities worldwide. His works focus on fundamental Islamic teachings, moral ethics, spiritual guidance, and comparative religious studies, reaching audiences across the Philippines and the global Filipino diaspora.

Early Life and Maranao Heritage

AbdulKhaliq Sharif Saripada was born on 27 January 1955 in Barangay Bangon, Marawi City, in the heart of the Bangsamoro homeland. He comes from a family deeply embedded in Maranao tradition and Islamic scholarship. His father, Disomimba Saripada, hailed from Pualas in Lanao del Sur, while his mother, Bae Labe a Diamla sa Marawi, held an honored traditional title within the community, reflecting their family's standing and influence.

On his maternal side, AbdulKhaliq descends from the lineage of Sharief Ismael of Buadi Sakayo in Marawi City, a respected Sharief clan within Maranao society. This genealogical connection to Islamic nobility and traditional leadership deeply shaped his intellectual and spiritual path. The Sharief heritage carries with it centuries of Islamic learning and community stewardship, values that would become central to his life's work.<ref name="lineage">AbdulKhaliq Sharif Saripada biographical document, lineage section</ref>

Legacy and Impact

AbdulKhaliq Sharif Saripada stands as one of the most prolific Tagalog-language Islamic scholars of the contemporary era. His work addresses a critical gap in Islamic education for Filipinos: the scarcity of high-quality, culturally-appropriate Islamic materials in the national language. By authoring and translating across diverse topics, from fundamental theology to practical ritual guidance, he democratized access to Islamic knowledge for millions of Tagalog speakers worldwide.

His publications have been circulated by major Islamic distribution networks and downloaded through digital platforms, reaching Filipino Muslims in the Philippines, North America, the Middle East, and other diaspora communities. The breadth of his output, from beginner-level guides to comparative religious studies, reflects a teaching philosophy rooted in gradual enlightenment and intellectual inclusion.

As a Maranao Muslim scholar, AbdulKhaliq represents the scholarly tradition of Bangsamoro Islamic thought while simultaneously serving as a translator and bridge-builder for the broader Muslim Filipino community. His legacy is not marked by institutional positions or political prominence, but by the quiet, sustained contribution of knowledge shared freely for the benefit of believers seeking to understand and practice their faith.
