Sahron Tamano

Sahron Roy Tamano (born August 13, 1973) is a Maranao public official, international administrator, and community leader from Tugaya, Lanao del Sur.

He currently serves as a Board Member of the Lanao del Sur Electric Cooperative (LASURECO), where he's been pushing hard for overdue reforms in one of Mindanao's most challenged power utilities.

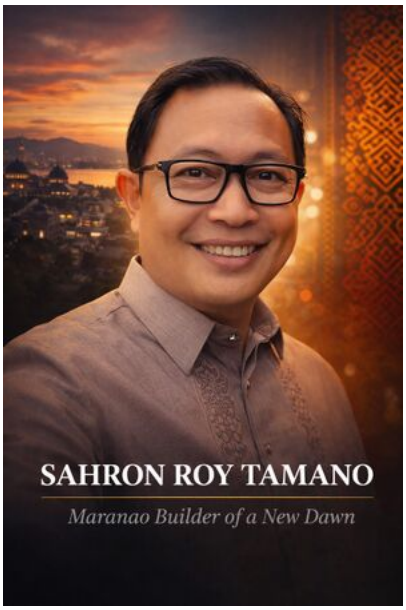

What makes Tamano's story compelling isn't just his career resume. It's the arc of it: a boy from Tugaya who sold shoes at Robinsons Place in Manila, crossed the seas to become a senior operations coordinator in Sharjah, returned home during a Bangsamoro in transition, and then walked into a boardroom to fight a P12.9 billion debt crisis.

He's often described as a "Maranao Builder of a New Dawn," a phrase that captures both the urgency of his reform work and the deeper cultural thread running through everything he does.

Early Life and Background

Sahron Roy Tamano was born on August 13, 1973, in Tugaya, a municipality in Lanao del Sur known for its mastery of the traditional okir art form and its long history as a center of Maranao craftsmanship.

Growing up in Tugaya shaped Tamano's instinctive connection to culture and community. The town's artistic heritage and its people's resilience appear to have left a mark on his leadership style, particularly in the way he later carried Maranao identity into international spaces.

He completed his primary education at Lower Dansalan Elementary School in 1986, graduating as Salutatorian. <ref name="bio_overview">Template:Cite document</ref>

Education

Tamano's academic path was consistent and forward-looking. After primary school, he enrolled at Jamiatul Philippine Al Islamia for secondary education, where he received a Leadership Award upon graduation in 1990. <ref name="bio_overview" />

He then pursued a degree in Business Management at Mindanao State University (MSU) in Marawi City, completing his studies in 1997. At MSU, he wasn't just a student in the traditional sense. He was a Service Awardee and a recognized student activist, already showing the kind of participatory energy he'd carry into every role after. <ref name="bio_overview" />

That same year, the Civil Service Commission conferred on him a Professional Career Eligibility, opening the door to public service even as he first turned toward the private sector.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Career

The Entrepreneur Years (1997–2005)

Right out of university, Tamano built something from scratch. By age 25, he was operating a retail business at Robinsons Place in Manila, specializing in imported footwear. He drew on skills he'd sharpened as a campus vendor during his MSU days, turning what might have looked like a side hustle into a real commercial enterprise. <ref name="bio_overview" />

This period gave him a practical education in financial management and market logistics that no classroom could fully replicate. It also demonstrated something that would define him throughout his career: a willingness to start from the ground up and build upward.

International Corporate Career: The UAE Chapter (2006–2019)

When business conditions in Manila shifted, Tamano didn't retreat. He pivoted. In 2006, he relocated to the United Arab Emirates and began building a second career at the Sharjah Cooperative Society, one of the region's largest retail and administrative organizations.

His trajectory there was one of consistent upward movement.

HR and Administration Officer (2008–2013)

His first major corporate role at the Cooperative placed him in charge of managing a diverse, multinational workforce. He streamlined administrative protocols, handled employee relations and recruitment, and ensured compliance with UAE Labor Laws and Sharjah's regulatory framework.

Perhaps most significantly, he modernized personnel records and welfare initiatives in ways that gave the organization a more stable administrative backbone during a period of rapid expansion.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Branch Supervisor (2014–2015)

Moving from back-office to front-line operations, Tamano took on direct management of branch-level work. He optimized daily workflows, implemented customer service standards, and supervised floor staff. The focus was practical: reduce logistical bottlenecks, keep standards high at the point of sale.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Senior Operations Coordinator (2015–2019)

His final role at the Cooperative was his most strategic. As Senior Operations Coordinator, Tamano managed the logistical frameworks connecting procurement, warehousing, and retail outlets across Sharjah. It required him to see the full picture and align very different departmental interests toward a single, seamless flow of goods and services.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Within his first year at the Cooperative, he had already been recognized as Best Employee of the Year for his performance during a critical restructuring period. That recognition led to successive promotions and ultimately placed him in senior leadership.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Return to the Philippines: Public Service and Consultancy (2020–Present)

Tamano returned to the Philippines as the Bangsamoro Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao (BARMM) was still finding its footing as a new political entity. He joined the Bangsamoro Youth Commission in 2020 as a Program Coordinator and Consultant, working on youth empowerment and regional integration initiatives.<ref name="bio_overview" />

It was a meaningful re-entry point: working with the region's youth, connecting the energy of young Bangsamoro with the institutions meant to serve them.

LASURECO Leadership and Reform Advocacy

In February 2024, Tamano was appointed to the Board of Directors of the Lanao del Sur Electric Cooperative (LASURECO).

The timing mattered. LASURECO has long been one of the most financially distressed electric cooperatives in the Philippines, carrying a historical debt of approximately P12.9 billion while serving a province with deep infrastructure gaps and a complex political landscape.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Tamano's tenure on the board has been defined by a focused, practical reform agenda.

Individual Household Metering

One of his most visible advocacy positions is the elimination of the "Pakyaw" system, a bulk-billing arrangement where a single meter covers multiple households. He has pushed for Individual Household Metering as a fairer, more transparent alternative. The argument is straightforward: when consumers can see exactly what they're paying for, accountability on both sides becomes easier to enforce.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Digital Financial Systems

Tamano has also championed the shift from manual financial reporting to an Electronic Accounting System at LASURECO. The goal is real-time fiscal monitoring, which is essential for any serious effort to understand and manage the cooperative's debt.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Infrastructure Stabilization

He has petitioned for increased power loads and the construction of new substations, particularly to address persistent low-voltage problems in the Basak Area and surrounding municipalities. These aren't glamorous issues, but they're the kind that affect daily life in concrete ways: whether a small business can keep its lights on, whether a family can refrigerate food or charge a phone.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Policy Engagement

Beyond the boardroom, Tamano has been active in engaging the Bangsamoro Parliament and various stakeholders to address the structural causes behind the regional power crisis. His approach links operational reform at LASURECO to the broader governance conversation about sustainable energy in the Bangsamoro region.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Cultural Diplomacy and Community Leadership

Tamano's career has never been purely professional. Alongside every corporate or government role, he's carried a parallel commitment to his community.

MARCOM: The Maranao Community in the UAE

As founder and first President of the Maranao Community in the UAE (MARCOM), Tamano built an organized home for Maranao overseas workers in the Gulf. MARCOM became a space for cultural solidarity, mutual support, and coordinated action for Filipinos far from Lanao.

He later served as MARCOM Adviser, continuing to shape its direction even after stepping back from the presidency.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Preserving Maranao Culture Abroad

One of the more vivid chapters of his overseas work was organizing the MARCOM Dance Troupe. Traditional Maranao musical instruments were brought to the UAE, and the troupe performed the Singkil dance for international audiences. It was a deliberate act of cultural visibility: bringing something authentically Maranao into spaces where it might never have been seen before.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Humanitarian Work

When the Marawi Siege broke out in 2017, Tamano was one of the key organizers of Operation Tulong Marawi, a relief effort coordinated from the UAE to support displaced families back home.

He also sustained a decade-long tradition of facilitating the distribution of dates and other aid from the UAE to the Philippines during Ramadhan, turning an act of faith into a reliable humanitarian cycle.<ref name="bio_overview" />

SSEAYP Youth Ambassador (1996)

Even before his professional career began, Tamano was already representing his country. In 1996, he was selected to participate in the Ship for Southeast Asian and Japan Youth Program (SSEAYP), serving as a "Young Ambassador of Goodwill" to eight nations. It was an early signal of the kind of cross-cultural leadership he'd later develop in the Gulf and bring back home.<ref name="bio_overview" />

Philosophy and Personal Values

Tamano grounds his leadership in a framework that holds both personal agency and faith in tension with each other. He doesn't see them as contradictory.

> "Life in this world is temporary... while God has His own plan, it is up to us how we live and use the blessings He has given. We can shape our destiny, but our fate rests with the Almighty."

This outlook has shaped how he approaches reform work. He's urgent without being reckless, ambitious without ignoring limits. He treats governance not as a career milestone but as a form of service grounded in accountability to both people and God.

For Tamano, being a "Maranao Builder of a New Dawn" isn't a ceremonial title. It's a working description of what he thinks a leader from Lanao del Sur is actually supposed to do.

Legacy

Tamano represents a generation of Bangsamoro leaders who built their credentials outside the region and then brought those capabilities home. His years in the UAE weren't just a career detour. They were a graduate school in organizational management, labor relations, and supply chain logistics, none of which were available to him in Lanao del Sur in the late 1990s.

What sets him apart is the synthesis. He didn't return as someone who had left his culture behind. He came back having organized Singkil dances in Sharjah and distributed Ramadhan aid across the Gulf. He came back as both a corporate professional and a community patriarch.

His work at LASURECO, however it ultimately plays out, reflects this dual commitment. Fixing a broken electric cooperative in one of the Philippines' poorest provinces isn't a stepping stone. For Tamano, it appears to be the point.
