Sultan Salic Manalusug Amai Manabilang Pangarungan

Sultan Salic Manalusug Amai Manabilang Pangarungan was a Maranao leader who served in both traditional and governmental capacities in Lanao del Sur. Bearing the title Sultan Dimasangcay Sa Dansalan, he became one of the most recognized traditional figures associated with the historic name of Marawi City, formerly known as Dansalan.

He was regarded as one of the longest-serving Senior Provincial Board Members of Lanao del Sur, reflecting decades of political service and public trust. Throughout his career, he occupied several key positions in local governance, including service as Vice Mayor of Marawi and Provincial Board Member.

During the Martial Law period under President Ferdinand Marcos Sr., Sultan Salic was appointed as Acting Governor and Vice Governor of Lanao del Sur. His appointments highlighted the national government's recognition of his influence and leadership within the province.

Beyond politics, Sultan Salic devoted much of his life to education and Islamic institutional development. He served as the long-time president of the Pangarungan Islamic College and the Jameo Mindanao Al-Islamie Islamic Center, helping sustain Islamic learning and religious education in Lanao del Sur.

His leadership became notable for harmonizing two systems of authority: the indigenous Maranao sultanate tradition and the formal structures of Philippine governance. This dual role allowed him to remain influential both within customary leadership circles and in state institutions.

Legacy and Family Influence

The descendants of Sultan Salic Pangarungan continued the family's tradition of leadership and public service. His sons became active in government, diplomacy, business, education, and peacebuilding, contributing to the broader socio-political landscape of the Bangsamoro region and beyond. The Pangarungan family became associated with civic leadership, community service, and mediation efforts, particularly in matters involving traditional conflict resolution and public administration.

Notable Sons

Nata Pangarungan

Nata Pangarungan served as Regional Director of Region XII of the Department of Public Works and Highways (DPWH). He became known among colleagues and constituents for his administrative leadership and dedication to public service.

His career in government infrastructure development reflected the Pangarungan family's longstanding involvement in governance and community leadership. He was regarded by associates as a leader attentive to the welfare of government personnel, local communities, and relatives, earning trust within both public institutions and traditional networks.

Rasid Pangarungan

Datu sa Marawi Rasid Pangarungan was a traditional leader and businessman associated with the administration of the Pangarungan Islamic College in Marawi City. He served for many years as one of the institution's administrators and advocates of Islamic education.

Rasid Pangarungan was also recognized for his community-oriented approach to leadership, emphasizing assistance to relatives, neighbors, and those in need. His social philosophy reflected the Maranao value of communal responsibility and kinship solidarity.

Omar M. Pangarungan

Omar M. Pangarungan served as a Filipino diplomat and government official. He became known for his work involving overseas Filipino workers (OFWs), economic diplomacy, and international representation.

He was often described as an advocate for OFW welfare and dignity, particularly in situations involving distressed migrant workers abroad. His diplomatic engagements also focused on expanding the Philippines' economic and labor relations in international markets.

His public service career contributed to the Pangarungan family's visibility beyond Mindanao, extending their influence into national and international affairs.

Anwar Pangarungan

Anwar Pangarungan, also known by the traditional title Cabugatan sa Bacolod, became active in traditional leadership and civic affairs in Lanao del Sur.

He served as Chairman of the Marawi Sultanate League and became associated with mediation efforts in local clan conflicts or rido. His involvement in peace negotiations and traditional conflict resolution reflected the continuing role of Maranao sultanates in maintaining social harmony within local communities.
