Aslama M. Alauya-Lamping

Dr. Aslama Masacal Alauya-Lamping, MD, FPCP, FPCCP, FCCP, is a Maranao physician, pulmonologist, and internal medicine specialist based in Marawi City, Lanao del Sur, Philippines.

She is the youngest child of Justice Saaduddin A. Alauya Sr., the first Jurisconsult in Islamic Law of the Philippines, and the first doctor in a family that has otherwise distinguished itself almost entirely through the law.

Her story is one of quiet, persistent firsts: first Maranao lady valedictorian of the MSU College of Medicine, first Maranao pulmonologist, first Maranao doctor to earn the Distinguished Public Servant Award from the Philippine College of Chest Physicians, first Maranao doctor and pulmonologist to receive the Pride of Ranaw Award, first Maranao elected president of the Iligan Society of Internists, and the first Maranao woman to graduate with distinction from a Harvard Medical School certificate program.

She stands not only as a pride of Ranaw in her own right, but as the medical pillar of a family that has, across two generations, broken barriers in law, banking, Islamic jurisprudence, and Philippine governance.

Background and Family

The Alauya family of Bacolod Grande, Lanao del Sur, is one of the most accomplished Bangsamoro families in modern Philippine public life.

At the center of it all is Justice Saaduddin A. Alauya Sr., a Maranao lawyer and Aleem (Islamic scholar) who served as Vice Governor of Lanao del Sur in 1989, as Acting Governor from 1992 to 1995, and as Chairman of the Code Commission on Muslim Laws in the Autonomous Region in Muslim Mindanao in 1994.

In August 1996, President Fidel V. Ramos appointed him as Jurisconsult in Islamic Law of the Philippines, making him the first person to hold that office under the Supreme Court of the Philippines.<ref name="wiki_alauya">Template:Cite web</ref>

The Jurisconsult, created under Presidential Decree 1083 or the Code of Muslim Personal Laws, functions as an expert advisor to the Supreme Court on matters of Islamic law.<ref name="wiki_alauya" />

He is also a prolific legal author, having written foundational texts on Muslim inheritance law, fundamentals of Islamic jurisprudence, Islamic penal law, and procedure and evidence under the Muslim Code.<ref name="wiki_alauya" />

During part of his career, Justice Alauya served as a professor at Umm Al-Qura University in Makkah, Saudi Arabia, a tenure that would shape the early education and worldview of his youngest daughter.

His children have matched his legacy, each staking out their own "firsts."

Atty. Arifa Alauya-Ala, a Certified Public Accountant and lawyer, is the first Maranao woman to serve as Senior Assistant Governor of the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas (BSP), the country's central bank.<ref name="bsp_ala">Template:Cite web</ref>

She is the BSP's lead advocate for Islamic banking and finance, chairing the Inter-Agency Working Group on Islamic Banking and Finance, and was a key figure in the passage of the Islamic Banking Law (Republic Act No. 11439) in 2019.<ref name="context_ala">Template:Cite web</ref>

In September 2025, she was recognized as a "Woman Influencer in Financial Services Industry" by the World Financial Innovation Series.<ref name="context_ala" />

Atty. Asma Alauya also serves in the legal services sector of the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas. [Note: The specific title of General Legal Counsel attributed to Atty. Asma Alauya could not be independently verified through available public records at the time of writing. This detail is sourced from family accounts and is subject to verification.]

Atty. Saaduddin M. Alauya Jr., a lawyer and Certified Public Accountant, currently serves as Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance of Mindanao State University Main Campus in Marawi City.<ref name="msu_alauya">Template:Cite web</ref>

Into this family of pioneering lawyers, administrators, and jurists, Dr. Aslama stepped not with a bar examination but with a stethoscope.

She became the first doctor in the family and, in doing so, opened an entirely new frontier for the Alauya legacy.

Early Life and Education Abroad

Dr. Aslama spent a significant portion of her early years and formative schooling in Makkah, Saudi Arabia, during the period when her father was serving as a professor at Umm Al-Qura University.

Growing up between the spiritual heart of the Islamic world and the cultural heartbeat of Marawi City gave her something few Maranao children of her generation had: a genuinely global perspective, paired with an unshakeable sense of who she was and where she came from.

From her earliest years in school through college, she was consistently at the top of her class.

She graduated as Valedictorian at every level of her academic journey, from grade school all the way to the College of Medicine.

Medical Education

Dr. Aslama completed her medical degree at the Mindanao State University College of Medicine, where she made history as the first Maranao lady Valedictorian of the college.

That achievement alone would have been remarkable, but it was only the opening chapter of a much longer record.

After earning her medical degree from MSU, she pursued residency training at the National Kidney and Transplant Institute (NKTI) in Metro Manila, then went on to complete fellowship training in pulmonary medicine at the University of the Philippines.<ref name="hms_feature">Template:Cite web</ref>

She holds the credentials MD, FPCP (Fellow of the Philippine College of Physicians), FPCCP (Fellow of the Philippine College of Chest Physicians), and FCCP (Fellow of the American College of Chest Physicians).

Medical Career

Clinical Work

Dr. Aslama is a pulmonologist and internal medicine specialist who has built her practice in Iligan City and the broader Lanao region.

She serves as one of the consultants at Amai Pakpak Medical Center, the only tertiary hospital in Marawi City serving Lanao del Sur and its neighboring cities and provinces.<ref name="hms_feature" />

She also holds a private pulmonology practice at Mercy Community Hospital and other hospitals in Iligan City.

During the COVID-19 pandemic, Dr. Aslama worked on the frontlines as a clinician in the respiratory unit of the internal medicine department at Amai Pakpak Medical Center, treating patients at the height of the health crisis while simultaneously training resident physicians.

Following her graduation from Harvard Medical School in 2024, she was assigned as medical specialist supervisor of Station 8 at Amai Pakpak Medical Center, a general medicine ward that routinely handles more patients than its official capacity, including critical cases when the intensive care unit is full.<ref name="hms_feature" />

She has been implementing lean management principles in that ward, applying the capstone work she developed at Harvard to improve patient outcomes and care efficiency at the hospital level.

First Maranao Pulmonologist

Among Dr. Aslama's most significant achievements is a straightforward but historically weighty fact: she is the first Maranao pulmonologist in the Philippines.

In a region where respiratory diseases, tuberculosis, and pulmonary complications from COVID-19 have placed enormous pressure on healthcare capacity, having the first Maranao specialist in pulmonary medicine based in the heart of Lanao is more than a milestone. It's a public health breakthrough.

Leadership in Medicine

Dr. Aslama made history as the first Maranao woman elected President of the Iligan Society of Internists, a distinction that reflects her standing not just as a clinician but as a recognized leader among her peers in the medical community.

She currently serves as Vice President of the Philippine College of Chest Physicians, Northern Mindanao Chapter, continuing to expand Maranao representation in the country's medical leadership landscape.

Harvard Medical School and International Recognition

Between managing her clinical responsibilities and training resident physicians at Amai Pakpak Medical Center, Dr. Aslama applied to the Harvard Medical School Postgraduate Medical Education's Leadership in Medicine: Southeast Asia certificate program (now expanded as the Leadership in Medicine: Asia Pacific program).<ref name="hms_sea">Template:Cite web</ref>

She was accepted.

> "I realized that aside from being a clinician, I wanted to learn about leadership, solving problems, and managing teams." (Dr. Aslama Alauya-Lamping, as cited by Harvard Medical School, 2024)

The one-year blended certificate program, developed in partnership with Sunway University in Malaysia, combines in-person workshops (in Bandar Sunway, Selangor and Boston, Massachusetts), pre-recorded lectures, and live webinars, covering leadership, health care finance, human resource management, quality management, and organizational change.<ref name="hms_sea" />

In February 2024, Dr. Aslama traveled to Boston for the final in-person workshop and graduation ceremony.

She graduated with distinction.

Harvard Medical School faculty recognized her as one of the top three capstone project proposal authors in her cohort.

She also received the Excellence Award for her team assignment, an honor recognizing standout performance in the program's collaborative finance component.<ref name="hms_feature" />

Her capstone proposal focused on implementing lean management principles to improve cardiopulmonary resuscitation outcomes in the general medicine ward of Amai Pakpak Medical Center, a practical and immediately applicable contribution to her home hospital.<ref name="hms_feature" />

> "The process of developing this capstone proposal made me realize the many ways in which we can improve processes in any institution. Starting with a small scope, we can gradually expand until we cover a larger dimension by integrating all the smaller scopes." (Dr. Aslama Alauya-Lamping, Harvard Medical School, 2024)

She is the first Maranao woman to graduate with distinction from a Harvard Medical School postgraduate certificate program, and the first from her community to earn recognition at that institution's level.

Awards and Distinctions

Dr. Aslama's record of "firsts" spans local, national, and international scales.

Pride of Ranaw Award

The Provincial Government of Lanao del Sur bestows the Pride of Ranaw Award on individuals whose achievements, integrity, and service bring distinction and honor to the Maranao people.

Dr. Aslama is the first Maranao doctor and pulmonologist to receive this recognition, which she accepted after completing her Harvard Medical School program.<ref name="hms_feature" />

> "I am so happy and grateful for my experience at Harvard Medical School, and my community is so thankful that I received this training." (Dr. Aslama Alauya-Lamping, Harvard Medical School, 2024)

Distinguished Public Servant Award (Philippine College of Chest Physicians)

The Philippine College of Chest Physicians (PCCP) confers its Distinguished Public Servant Award on members who have demonstrated exemplary service, leadership, and significant contributions to the advancement of pulmonary medicine in the Philippines.

Dr. Aslama is the first Maranao recipient of this award, recognizing her record of clinical service, community engagement, and healthcare leadership in a medically underserved region.

Valedictorian, MSU College of Medicine

Her distinction as the first Maranao lady Valedictorian of the MSU College of Medicine placed her at the top of one of Mindanao's most competitive professional schools, a milestone that set the tone for everything that followed.

Harvard Excellence Award

Her selection as a top-three capstone author and recipient of the Excellence Award for teamwork during the HMS Leadership in Medicine program marks her as the first Maranao woman honored in that capacity by one of the world's foremost medical institutions.

Summary of "Firsts"

The Alauya Family: A Legacy of Firsts

No article about Dr. Aslama would be complete without acknowledging that her firsts did not happen in a vacuum. They came from a family that has, across two generations, made a habit of breaking new ground.

Her father, Justice Saaduddin A. Alauya Sr., was the first Jurisconsult in Islamic Law of the Philippines, appointed by President Fidel V. Ramos in 1996 and serving until 2003. No Maranao lawyer had held that office before him, and his tenure helped shape the framework of Islamic jurisprudence within the Philippine judiciary.<ref name="wiki_alauya" />

Her sister, Atty. Arifa Alauya-Ala, is the first Maranao woman to serve as Senior Assistant Governor of the Bangko Sentral ng Pilipinas, leading the country's Islamic banking and finance agenda and earning international recognition as a "Woman Influencer in Financial Services."<ref name="bsp_ala" /><ref name="context_ala" />

Her brother, Atty. Saaduddin M. Alauya Jr., serves as Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance of Mindanao State University Main Campus, stewarding the finances and administration of one of the largest state universities in the Philippines.<ref name="msu_alauya" />

Together, the Alauya family represents one of the most decorated Bangsamoro families in the country's institutional history, with representation across the judiciary, central banking, state university governance, and now medicine.

Dr. Aslama is the youngest, and arguably the one who widened the family's footprint the furthest by entering a field no Alauya had entered before.

Personal Life

Dr. Aslama is married to Engineer Abdulmojeb Lamping.

They are blessed with twin daughters, Amanah Ayla and Arafah Aneena, whom family accounts describe as equally talented and intellectually gifted.

She is a proud and self-identified member of the Meranaw tribe, a Muslim Filipino ethnic group native to the region around Lanao del Sur, known for their rich cultural heritage including the okir art tradition, the malong, and a deep history of Islamic learning and scholarship.<ref name="hms_feature" />

Her identity as a Maranao woman, a Muslim, and a daughter of Lanao del Sur runs through her professional choices, her clinical practice, and her community commitments. She has not left Mindanao behind for a more prominent career elsewhere. Instead, she has brought Harvard-level training home to the hospitals and patients of her own people.

Legacy

Dr. Aslama Alauya-Lamping's career is, at its core, a story about what happens when excellence meets commitment to community.

She could have taken her credentials, her Harvard certificate, her fellowship training from UP and NKTI, and her PCCP fellowship, and built a career in Metro Manila or abroad.

She didn't.

She came back to Marawi, to Iligan, to the Lanao region, and she stayed. She treats patients at Amai Pakpak, the only tertiary hospital serving a city still rebuilding from the 2017 siege. She trains resident physicians. She manages a private practice. She chairs medical societies. She implements lean healthcare principles in wards that are perpetually over capacity.

And she does it all as the first Maranao pulmonologist, as the youngest daughter of the country's first Jurisconsult in Islamic Law, as the sister of the BSP's first Maranao Senior Assistant Governor, as a wife, a mother of twins, and a Harvard graduate.

> "The training that I received in the Leadership in Medicine: Asia Pacific program added valuable context in my past roles, and it continues to do so in my current position." (Dr. Aslama Alauya-Lamping, Harvard Medical School, 2024)

That is the measure of her legacy: not just the firsts she collected, but the ones she created space for.
